TRADE PUBLICATIONS.

LEAD WOOL.—United Lead Co., 111 Broadway, New York City. Paper; 9 × 6 ins.; pp. 15; illustrated.

The advantages of lead wool for calking water and gas mains and various other pipe joints as compared with the use of molten lead for this purpose are set forth in this catalog. A table showing the approximate quantities of lead wool and yarn required for various diameters of pipe from 2 to 42 ins., under pressure as high as 500 lbs., is given.

GARBAGE INCINERATORS. — Nashville Bridge Co., Nashville, Tenn. Catalog; paper; 8 × 9 ins.; pp. 12; illustrated.

A newly patented garbage incinerator designed to utilize the heat of combustion is described. The patents have been secured by Dr. J. B. Harris, Nashville, Tenn., who has arranged with the Nashville Bridge Co. to act as contracting engineers and builders for the Southern States. We have ascertained by special inquiry that no furnaces of this type have yet been built.

INFORMATION FOR WATER-WORKS MEN.—Neptune Meter Co., 90 West St., New York City. Leather; 3 × 6 ins.; pp. not given.

A variety of tables and other useful information for water-works engineers and superintendents is included in this volume and is followed by a diary for the year. Some of the tables give information in considerable detail, which will be of particular use in connection with the setting of meters, and the maps of the United States and other parts of the world, and the world as a whole, are included.

ELECTRIC FUSES.—General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Bulletin 4899. Paper; 8½ × 10 ins.

Fuses for use on circuits of voltages up to and including 110,000 volts are here described. Open fuses are seldom used in such places on account of the arcs that are liable to follow. In the type described, the fuse is blown in a non-conducting tube of suitable dimensions. It gives the property of quickly opening the circuit and projecting the arc from one end of the tube. It is claimed that the line current is opened at approximately the zero point of the wave and that no surging takes place on the line.

BALOJTICONS AND ACCESSORIES.—Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y. Paper; 7 × 9¾ ins.; pp. 66; illustrated.

Although engineers are likely to be interested in optical projection only indirectly as occasional lectures, this book contains so much that is difficult to find elsewhere that we take pleasure in calling our readers' attention to it. The whole subject of lantern-slide projection will be found covered in a most satisfactory way, both as to theory and practice. The printing and illustrations are excellent, and every engineer who has occasion to use such a machine, as many do in talks before engineering societies and clubs, will find this booklet both interesting and instructive.

MULTI-DIFFERENTIAL ARCH DAM. —Multiple Arch Hydraulic Construction Co., Ltd., Engineers, Spartanburg, S. C. 6 × 9 ins.; pp. 25.

This unique little pamphlet opens with the following "elegy" upon the gravity type of masonry dam:

The "Solid" Dam.

Created by a lavish hand
And fostered from your birth,
You've thriven well in every land
And lauded for your worth.

'Tis truly a disgrace to think
How you have fooled us all,
Your prestige was a money sink
And we have been the thrall.

But thanks to scientific search,
Your day is done at last;
You'll take-the-count from all of us
And sink into the past.

The dam described in the pamphlet is made up of a series of small masonry arches, supporting a comparatively thin inclined wall. The construction is, in fact, similar to the now well known Ambursen type of hollow dam, except that instead of having rectangular cells and using reinforced concrete to take the bending stress on the back of each cell, the multiple arch construction substitutes an arch cell in which the masonry is all in compression and no reinforcement is needed. This type of dam was patented by Mr. George E. Ladshaw in 1908, U. S. Patent No. 828752. A dam of this type was completed on the King River, Cal., in 1908, which is 61 ft. high and 677 ft. long. It is stated that several other dams of this type are to be built on the Pacific Coast.

ELECTRIC GENERATING APPARATUS.—General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Miscellaneous Bulletins; paper; 8×10½ ins.

A popular exposition of the Curtis type of steam turbine has been written for Bulletin 4883. The general principles of design and features of construction of the turbine and of the driven generator are found. Following the text are numerous full-page illustrations of typical installations of the several types of vertical and horizontal Curtis units.

In Bulletin 4860 is a popular review of the elements of electro-metallurgy. This is made as an introduction to the description of designs of generators particularly adapted for the heavy currents and low voltages required in this work. The machines range in size from 1½ to 15 KW.

This company has developed a large number of motor-generator sets for converting alternating current to direct, and the general line of apparatus is described in Bulletin 4849. The sets are made up of various combinations of separate motors and generators, and range in capacity from 95 to 7,000 KW.

What are known as "synchronous condensers" are described in Bulletin 4859. These are essentially synchronous motors of light construction intended to float on alternating-current lines to improve the power factor. This they do by virtue of being superexcited synchronous motors drawing a current which "leads" the voltage. They may be used as synchronous motors if the load does not approach the rated capacity, which is undesirable on account of the light construction. The bulletin also contains a brief exposition of the theory and economics of improving power factor with such machines.

In Bulletin 4868 are illustrated and described rotary converters for railway and lighting service in capacities ranging from 25 to 2,500-KW. These are somewhat the same purpose as the motor-generator sets mentioned above, but the functions of both machines are concentrated in a single one. They are essentially synchronous motors with a commutator connected to the motor windings for drawing off direct current. They are less flexible than the motor-generators noted in that the ratio of alternating current to direct current has not the wide range of the other machines.
